It seems as if everyone in town was able to raise the price to go to the Stampede this week at Calgary but the editor. Don't forget in the tide of prosperity that is surging around you, your unpaid subscription to your local paper or that little account of which you have had notice. A sign in the Granum Drug Store is equally applicable to our business, "our books are full, but our till is empty." The latest game, according to several of our contemporaries is, "Ticking the Editor." We think you would like that game very much! We know we would.

MIGHT PREVENT

The prevalence of mail order buying from this town suggests that the merchant might strengthen the cause of home-buying by placing a premium on each buying. A good system is to make out the account on the regular credit prices and then give a substantial discount for cash. By placing this discount on the bill, the purchaser has an object lesson before him of a system of buying for cash. It is a good system, too, for the merchant, total credit purchase $100, 10% off, $10.00 saved, the advantage is tangible. It is as simple a matter for the merchant of this town to have the cash of his customers go to Macleod and the credit buying, his, as if it were to go to Calgary or Winnipeg. It is a simple price and the merchant here should command the trade of the district.

THE TIME IS NOW

Some of our merchants have lately, as an adjunct to regular advertising in the News, adopted a system of circular letters, of the nature of a personal business talk with their patrons. The success which has attended these in the personal circular letter campaign warrants us in recommending to those who have not made use of the system, a trial. Come in and talk it over.

COULD NOT FOOL HIM

A joke was perpetrated on a train layer from one of our elements, the other day. So we heard that had been brought in before my frost had made its appearance was shown him and his unreluctantly declared it frosted avenge, he could not frost what when he saw it. # TOWN MATTERS

Three absentees last Thursday.

Dr. C. R. Learn submitted his resignation of the position of Medical Health Officer. With reluctance, the Council accepted as the Dr., having sold his practice, is leaving town.

It seemed to be a night of resignations. The assessor, George Simpson, stating that as he expected to lose his assistant in the postoffice at the end of the month (here on) of the councillors came to attention and as the collection of the tax this year will require some strong arm work, he wished to be relieved of his duties. The Council, loath to take any action in the matter requested the withholding of the resignation until the end of the year.

A rumor has been circulating on the street in regard to the fact that some are alleged to exist between the town and the Dominion Bank which is carrying the town account. The rumor also hints at drastic action on the part of the Bank. It is true that the town has exceeded its limit credit which is $20,000 by about $3,000. The Bank has asked this over at once. They have also said that collections from what were arrears of taxes be turned into the town's account thus being diverted from 1912 revenue. This, the Council has been told, is not true. The Bank refused to be done as they are technically no arrears have having been incorporated in 1912 tax collection.

Quality Essential. The importance of bread making quality was shown by the fact that England the tendency has been toward big quality, with the result that the bread-making quality is not so good as it used to be.

Another variety is the bread which is three weeks ahead of the first. This wheat weighs 6 pounds to the bushel, is hard, but does not give an enormous yield. A Midwinter Adventure on the Ice in Lake Michigan.

TWO SURPRISES AND A FIGHT.

The Ice Hunter Was Started by the Ice Going Out and Then by the Ice Coming In.

A few years ago, in the dead of winter, Mr. A. Leach was out on Lake Michigan on a winter trip, fishing through the ice. Everything was proceeding merrily, when, suddenly, the ice broke, and he was in the water. He was going to the rescue, but the ice was so thin, and he was so tired, that he could not do so.

"First of all I heard a series of low whistles under the ice, and then I saw a hole in the ice. I jumped it, thinking that some one had been lost in the ice. I had found my man. To my surprise, I found him not so much as I expected. He was not so much as I expected. He was not so much as I expected.

As the knife had no other weapon on the handle and a frozen fishing line was in a snarl, he was in a predicament. He was in a predicament. He was in a predicament. He was in a predicament.

FIRE THROUGH MATCHES.

Norwegian Sculptor Proves Identity

With Charred Match.
But for the charred ends of these burnt matches, Sørensen, the celebrated Norwegian sculptor, might still be behind the bars of a German prison. They did not prove that he was not a spy, but they did enable him to prove that he was a Canadian artist, and might be Madsen himself.

Madsen and a brother artist were traveling through the Ries-nidge, in Germany—of the usual sort, you know—when they got into a quarrel with some peasants. The latter got the worst of the argument, and, bent on revenge, followed the strangers to the station, where they denounced them to the police as spies.

The German police are very sensitive on the subject of spies. Here was a chance to distinguish themselves. So they promptly caught Madsen and his companion into the local prison. After a few days, when it was convenient for the head of the local police, they were handcuffed and taken to headquarters for examination. They stated their names, their occupation and their place of residence. In addition, Madsen's companion spoke eloquently of his own great fame, not only in Norway but in Germany, in fact, all over the civilized world.

"Ach, and your passports?" said the unimpressed inspector.

"They are with our heavy luggage at the railway station," said Madsen. "We are at present on a walking trip."

"Ach, so?" The police inspector nodded sagely, and ordered the culprits taken back to prison. It was a miserable place. The floor was little and damp. There was but little light, and that only at noon-day. They had to sleep on the floor, and there was more to eat, and their food was so bad, and the cell was so small, and they were so crowded. There they remained for a week.

They had shown the head of the police their portfolios.

"Ach, a common rule with spies," the inspector said. "Give us drawing materials," they demanded, when finally several of the town artists visited them out of curiosity, "and we will at least prove that we are artists."

The request only excited uproarious laughter. Fortunately the cell contained a few sheets of newspaper, wrapping paper, and the tobacco-juggling Germans had not been so cruel as to deprive their prisoners of the ends of their pipes. Suddenly Madsen got up, he filled his pipe and lit it, and it, scratching one of the ordinary matches he carried for that purpose, and then, with the charred end of the matchstick, he began to sketch on a sheet of wrapping paper.

His companion did likewise. They drew rapidly, speaking liberally to their visitors, burning more matches for pencils. The animosity and suspicion of the German police place to admiration of the prisoners' skills. On the spur of the moment Madsen sketched a masterpiece—"The Artist in Prison." It was a vivid representation of their own plight.

This convinced the visiting artist that they had been entertaining celebrities unwearied. The prison doors were thrown open and the artists permitted to continue their tour without further molestation.

At first the chagrined head of the police seemed to fear that his talented guests—who had suffered such deprivations with a crime of which they were innocent—would use the sketches for damages, or take reprisals of some other kind. When Madsen informed him that all true artists were only too glad to suffer in their art's cause, and that he and his companion considered the adventure worth fully what it had cost them, the official decided on making them his honored guests at a farewell supper, including the limited "steins."

It is even possible to identify the nature of the garment through which the bullet has passed by a careful examination of the marks on the lead.

DE LAVAL CREAM SEPARATORS

The World's Standard

Used Exclusively by
98% of World's Creamers

Ten years ago there were a dozen different makes of creamery or factory separators in use. To-day over 98 per cent of the world's creameries use De Laval separators exclusively.

When it comes to buying a separator why not profit by the experience of the creameryman, which qualifies him to advise you correctly.

He knows which separator will give you the best service and be the most economical for you to buy. That's why 98 per cent of the world's creameries use the De Laval exclusively.

There can be no better recommendation for the De Laval than the fact that the men who make the separation of milk a business use the De Laval to the practical exclusion of all other makes. They know the longest from experience.
